Course description

Because so many aspects of religious experience are ineffable, invisible and inexpressible, to chronicle and analyze such experiences poses particular challenges to academic analysis. Yet anthropologists, sociologists and religionists prolifically produce ethnographies of religion. This seminar explores a range of aims, strategies and genres for writing religion in multiple contexts of culture, history and politics. Particular theoretical positions often inform and inspire ethnographic writings on religion; we attend to theory as a force not only shaping practice, but also evolving from it. Some of the authors on this syllabus acknowledge their own identities altered in the field, and many grapple in various ways with the implications of inexplicable experiences. If there is any commonality, it is an insistence that -- when writing religion -- conditions of knowledge and modes of representation are situated in social, political, economic, historical, hierarchical, colonial, and familial circumstances and often dependent on interpersonal relationships.

Readings

Eight books containing required readings should be available at the University Bookstore. They have been placed on 1-day reserve in Bird. In addition, a number of required articles and book sections (and a few recommended ones as well) will be accessible through Blackboard.

Books

Stevenson, Lisa. 2014 Life Beside Itself: Imagining Care in the Canadian Arctic. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Articles

Fisher, Gareth. "Riding with Monks in Airboats or Fieldnotes, June 8-15, 2015"

Wadley, Susan S. TBA

Responsibilities

seminar process All participants should be committed to faithful attendance and diligent reading of all required materials. Responsibility for commenting and raising questions on each week's syllabus readings, and posting your "talking points" on blackboard, is shared by all seminar members. In class you will have a chance to recapitulate your thoughts as discussion starters. Posts must normally be submitted by dusk on Wednesday nights.

writing Every student will pursue a research topic related to the course content, but independently conceived, and produce a substantial paper. This may be a critical study via secondary sources of any issue related to the ethnography of religion. Alternatively, it may be based on fieldwork you have already conducted within the previous two years; or it may involve limited fieldwork undertaken in the course of the semester with a locally accessible religious group. The project will build, under the instructor's supervision, through stages of abstract (week 6), outline or preliminary draft with bibliography (week 10), oral presentation (weeks 10-15), and final product: at least 20 but no more than 25 pages (double-spaced) due one week after our last class meeting.

speaking Beyond regular participation through raising points and responding in our weekly conversations, each seminar member will give one coherent and succinct (about 10-minute) oral presentation – based on their individual writing before it is complete; this will allow you to discuss your ideas and benefit from group feedback.
